

Horoscopes Reveal the Influence of the Transiting Planets

Regarding the ongoing, cyclic process of planets in orbit, or what is referred to as “Transits”, we can make general predictions based on knowing your Sun Sign alone. Again, this is due to principles of holism and fractals. It is true that the more precise means of determining probable trends and future turns, rises, descents and events..., is best done by working with your Birth Chart. This can be done even without your time of birth, but knowing it sharpens the picture measurably.

This extends to working with Horoscopes, which can shed light on any given time period, whether it is a day, week, month, year or multiple years. Prediction in Astrology is best understood as outlining probabilities, and so should not be challenged to determine certainties, due to many factors, principle of which is free will. This is how the game, the school, the Divine Matrix of duality, or however else one might describe it, is designed and works.

The future is probable, but it is not certain and we are invited to engage in the co-creative process via our free will. This has traditionally been described as ‘the planets incline, but they do not compel’. However, it should also be noted that the incline is more compelling than is commonly recognized. The future is probable, but it is not certain and the probabilities of life are subject to multiple layers of factors that can be understood to be meaningful and purposeful. In this regard, we can say that Astrology especially, and Numerology too can be accurately understood to be “archetypal maps” able to decode these probabilities and present them as predictive trends.

Trying to predict absolute outcomes, the endeavor of more traditional Astrology, yet still the objective of those practitioners whose perspective have not evolved to the greater realization that we are, individually and collectively, co-creators of these outcomes, misses the point of this co-creative factor. It effectively endeavors to remove the observer and, more fully, the participator(s) from the equation, which is misunderstanding of the ultimately subjective nature of existence. In simple terms, probability and possibility are core features of the divine matrix.

So, the age old question of fate or free will has been resolved: the answer is fate (probable destiny) AND free will. Asserting that it is one or the other in any absolute sense indicates that not enough thought, study, observation and experimentation has gone into this important question. As said, the word probable, however, should not be underestimated.

Probability can be described as ‘large’, while free will is ‘sharp’, and it can at least cut into the larger, probability factor and make its indelible marks, and even leverage significant advantages. Yet, at what point does notions of overcoming these probabilities, entirely, reveal both a lack of common sense, and assumptive notions to want to control nature in some absolute sense. This aspiration can be recognized to reveal an imbalanced judgment of the realities of life? Such thinking can be deemed both naïve and fearful to the point of psychopathic attitudes associated with unconscious reactions to try to control everything and everyone. Interestingly, this 'trap of the mind' is itself a feature of the game, so it should be expected, and it is helpful to understand it so that it can be recognized.

As the story goes, various networks of humanity, often those who possess great wealth and power, and who have for centuries and even millennia, reveal long lineages of deep investment into perpetuating their power at any cost, and there is good reason to say that these 'families' go to great lengths to do so. In Astrology, this can be understood in the wider sense as the lower reaches of the Scorpio factor. But, do not assume that everyone you know who has strong Scorpio in their chart is like this. However, they will often identify with this strategic determination and will often identify with it better than most.

Both for personal reasons and to also contribute to healing this 'human dilemma' that exists in the collective mind, therefore, a golden key is to have access to better knowing what the probabilities are so that you can include this awareness with your personal, and our collective realities, responsibilities, dreams, visions, goals and aspirations guided from both within and without, as we engage in the game of life.
